SARA GREENBERGER RAFFERTY
Rachel Uffner Gallery, October 26–December 21

Humor, Hollywood, and the outward image are recurrent preoccupations for Sara Greenberger Rafferty, who over the past decade—since her breakout 2006 show at MoMA PS1, organized by Alanna Heiss—has created photo-based works that explore the slapsticky comedic history of the silver screen, often in disturbing ways. This year has been a big one for the artist, who was included in both the Whitney and Hammer biennials (as if anything could top her inclusion in last year’s “Jew York” survey), and her first show of new work in three years at Rachel Uffner Gallery is sure to be an event, taking on the possibility of the gallery’s new two-story space for the first time.
