NEW SEAN KENNEDY & SAMARA GOLDEN SHOWS: ARTLIST'S 3 MUST-SEE SHOWS

1. Daniel Zeller @ Pierogi Gallery

October 16—November 15

“Immiscible Cohesion,” Daniel Zeller’s new solo show with Pierogi Gallery, is a celebration of the impossible. The works on display aim to, as the title suggests, showcase the juxtaposition and joining of opposing elements. The show includes both black and white ink drawings on paper as well as a large-scale sculpture that attempt to create compositions both on the micro and macro scales, paying homage to the scientific influences that manifest themselves in Zeller’s oeuvre. On display at 177 North 9th Street, Brooklyn, NY.

2. Sean Kennedy @ Rachel Uffner Gallery

September 12—October 25

Rachel Uffner’s first solo exhibition of Sean Kennedy’s work utilizes both the gallery’s vertical and horizontal exhibition spaces. The gallery’s ground floor has dedicated itself to the display of Kennedy’s new circular appropriations of commercial logos and imagery. Meanwhile, in the gallery’s upstairs space, viewers can see Kennedy deal with the commercial ubiquity of quotidian products in a different way: by suspending them overhead, demonstrating the immense importance these seemingly based products (and larger consumerism) hold in our lives. On view at 170 Suffolk Street, New York, NY.

3. Samara Golden @ Canada

September 12—October 25

Samara Golden is most known for her striking, at times disorientating sculptural works. Using mirror and quotidian objects, Golden builds rooms “from the ceiling down,” creating spaces that redefine spatial delineations, uproot laws of physics and awe the viewer. For her solo exhibition at Canada, “A Fall of Corners,” Golden has installed more of her signature spaces, rooms that are both uncannily familiar in their decor yet discombobulating in their physical impossibility. On view at 333 Broome St, New York, NY.
